I'll take a latte please

© Margaret J. Wheatley

In Minneapolis airport, the Somalians serve us hungry weary travelers with innocent true smiles.

When they began their long march westward, escaping violence,
terrors on their path,
hunger in their bones,
only fear prodding them forward, could they possibly dream beyond their flight to this day when they would smile again as they serve me a latte? (tall, dark, skinny)
